Herr Doc. PhDr. Pavel Vařeka, Ph.D., Plzeň,
spricht zum Thema:

Archaeology of a Zigeunerlager: Lety 1942–1943 (South Bohemia, Czech Republic)

In recent decades, former Nazi labour, concentration, and extermination camps have become the subject of intense archaeological research. Nevertheless, to date, those attempts have rarely been directed at assessing the material testimony of the Romani Porajmos – the Roma Holocaust. The first project of this kind was undertaken at the former camp in Lety (Czech Republic) which was used as an internment camp for Sinti and Roma in the Protektorat Böhmen und Mähren in 1942–1943. The fact that an industrial pig farm, established in the 1970s, is situated at the location of the former camp has been causing justified indignation and heated debates. Recent archaeological research has brought strong evidence regarding the exact location and material remains of the Roma camp which supported redeeming of the pig farm by the state and intended establishment of the Lety Camp Memorial.
